“Did we meet on Elysian Fields... or was it fair of Spain... did we roam this land before, as a red man of the plain?" You leave me at a loss for words, when words were something that you were never at a loss for. You took us boys when we were at our lowest, only to do your best to raise us up. Even when you could not keep us any longer you did all you could to envelope us in a sense of love absent in our lives as children. You protected us, even when you were not there to protect, you loved us even when you were not there to love, and shielded us from the wrongs that you constantly strived to make right. I often wonder what life would have been like if you could of kept us, what it would have been like if I would not of had to pull away for the last 20 years. I wonder as well what I may have lost for not being around as well. All I can say, at least for me, you gave the tools on how to feel and give love, when love was not something felt all that often. You gave me the chance to learn the true meaning of "to dance like no one was watching". You took the complications of life created by others, and always seemed to solve them, with simple resolve and abandonment of self. For that I will always be grateful. Those summers in Florida are the bright moments in my memories of childhood. I will always remember the day I was driving you crazy, and you told me that there was a squirrel in the front yard that would eat from your hand. You sent me out onto the porch, full loaf of bread in hand, to concur the quest. Seemingly hours later you finally came to check on my, and to your own surprise, found me feeding a squirrel by hand on the front porch. It running up, taking a piece of bread out of my hand, and running away, but not too far. For that, thank you for showing me to believe the possible could be possible, and that obstacles can be overcome with patience and fortitude. Most of all, thank you for showing me how to use my words as well, even if the lessons taught by you came to me too late in life. I will miss you with all my heart, but I do not fear... for one day we will meet again. Love you always, Sean-D
