“ Debby had the greatest taste. Before she became ill, she would buy the most delicate things. The one would never think of buying for oneself. I still have a little portrait. She bought me and the painting that we both saw in New Mexico and a little restaurant near George O’Keeffe’s house. It just showed up at our table. I wanted to buy it the year before, but it was too expensive Debby and I both agreed that was the timing. It was meant to be mine. I now have it hanging in my home in Mount Dora I miss you, Debby. I miss the old Deb and I miss my little sister

“ Debby tomorrow I'm going to Italy but I remembering the trip you and I took to the south of France. We went to a perfume factory we bought for perfume in metal bottles. They said it lasted longer. That way I put a scent called Fragonard and I'm wearing that 10 years later or maybe 15 to Italy and it still has the same wonderful scent.

Debby this week is your birthday July 17. You've been having now for two years my memories of you or the two of us in Westport shirtless at the age of five and seven running in the lawn and getting into good trouble. I don't know where Pam was. She was older than us so I don't think she hung out with her two younger sisters Debby you had great taste. You were very smart and you were beautiful. I am sorry that you didn't realize all of those things about yourself when you were approaching your 50s you judge your inside by your side and you had so much of both. Horses to Pam it's not written on your obituary. She claims she does not like them yet. She found out about your friend Lynn by reading hers Debby I love you and I miss you. I know you will be there for me when I cross over.

It's been two years now, Debby. I so wish you were alive. You were smart and sophisticated, but you didn't have faith in yourself. I hope you were not in much pain before you died You were very brave. I love you.

Good evening, Debby I miss you. It's been two years now since you've died I was there with you at your bedside with a minister and your friend from across the street where you lived. Pam has your ashes now with mothers and Bill. She has kept on his ashes now for about 10 years maybe more and I suppose she will keep your ashes too. They are hidden in dark places at her house. It doesn't seem right somehow for your memory to be on the top of the shelf hidden behind the clock I know where you are now you understand more about our relationship and of course yourself. I have a picture of you and I Lynn and fire Island. We're very happy that night all three of us and Rosemary's kitchen. We were young. The weekend was just starting off. We were gonna have lots of fun. All of us look so beautiful radiant Lynn is there with you now. I hope that you connected with her. I love you Debby and I miss you terribly. Please be there for me when I cross over.
