“ I didn't know Mildred. I knew Josephine's mom. My great grandmother. I don't really know anybody any more though and nobody knows me. I see that this family is still capable of love. I remember feeling it's warmth when I was little. Now, as a middle aged man, I just keep watching you all pass away and I feel this emptiness and helplessness. My cousins. Donnie, Augie, Bruce. My favorite uncles. My Grandmother and grandfather. My father. I just want everyone to know I love you. We will probably never speak again. After this I will fade back into whatever place this is I'm in without you all. But you're always in my heart ever since I was little.
